This intermediate-block stucco residence is 2 stories high and sits among other similar houses. Painted beige with a Spanish tile roof, it features rectangular casement windows with 4 rows of 4 vertical bricks, brick header sills and Spanish tile shed roofs above the 3 entrances.

Four fieldstone steps lead to the central porch, enclosed by stucco walls with a rounded entrance and a round-headed opening on the right side. The rounded wooden door carries 6 lights in its upper section. The porch is piggy-backed by a 2nd story balcony with curving stucco walls. Two Doric pilasters support a Spanish tile roof. A rectangular opening is visible behind the balcony.

Trees and shrubbery cover the 1st floor rectangular window to the left of the front porch. Two rectangular windows with 3 vertical rows of 4 lights fill the 2nd floor.

To the right is another entrance, gained by 4 fieldstone steps. The round-headed door with 6 upper lights is projected by a Spanish tile shed roof. On the 2nd floor is a rectangular window identical to the other 2nd floor windows. The southern facade holds 2 smaller rectangular windows with 2 rows of 3 vertical lights and brick header sills. The first floor window is to the left of the facade; the 2nd story window, to the right.

A third front entrance, recessed several feet from the front facade, is reached by 4 fieldstone steps. The rectangular door with 4 upper lights is also protected by a Spanish tile shed roof. A small 2nd story, casement window with 2/2 lights is underlined by brick sills.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

A variety of Spanish elements combine with popular architectural details of the 1930's to form these ~~electric~~ stucco residences. The arches and tiled roofs recall the Mission Style houses of California and the Southwest, the vigas are derivative of the Pueblo Style so popular in the 1920's. ~~with~~
